

JUNE 2022

The crick was pretty, and held fish, but in the stretch near camp, it was way too fast for kids and old guys to wade.

After some exploration we found some more accessible water, for future visits. Bugs were about—

Our club was recently represented to the younger set of our community, as I was invited by a summer library instructor to talk to her class. About 30 showed up, ranging in age from 3 to 11 years, and most showed interest in photos of fish caught locally and dragon fly life stages. The box of topwater bugs that was passed around seemed to catch more interest, and a couple of the older kids enjoyed trying their hand at casting.

If you are around Mann Creek Reservoir, keep an eye (and a camera) out for anyone using off road vehicles inappropriately, causing damage to the shoreline terrain. Grant has documented the damage, and the affected agencies have been contacted. If you can catch someone in the act (without putting yourself in danger), let us know so we can get the evidence to the right officers.

If you have not already, check out the club's web page. Royce Stearns put it together, and I am sure he would welcome anything of interest to be included. If you catch bigger fish than I do, you could have bragging-right photos out for the world to see.

Fly tying on the 19th at 7:00 pm (Weiser Library conference room) is still on tap. Ray Perkins is your leader, and he tells me he will show various dubbing techniques using a PMD (pale morning dun) mayfly pattern.

Don't forget the picnic/barbeque on August 9th. Dick will have the details elsewhere in the newsletter. I hope I will be back from the mountains by then Go have some fun.

On the Lighter Side

fly tying The art of attaching feathers, fur, wool, and silk to a tiny hook to create artificial lures that imitate insects, a skill easily mastered by anyone who can peel a grape blindfolded with a pair of tweezers and a butter knife while wearing oven mitts.

I looked up opaque but the definition wasn't very clear.
